When you reach the page for your chosen topic area, the latest news and publications (called news feeds) are arranged by the websites that the news items have come in from. News feeds come in from a wide variety of publications and organisations, for example, NICE, Journals such as the The Lancet and the British Journal of Psychiatry, news sites such as BBC Health News, and other organisations including the Faculty of Public Health, the Centre for Mental Health and the King's Fund.

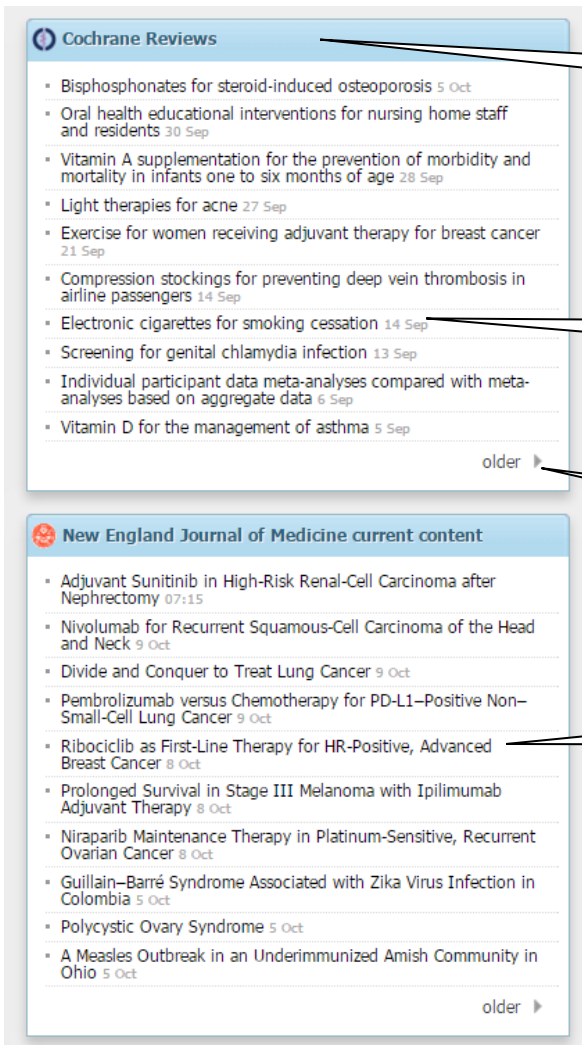

The topic you have chosen is highlighted. You can click on another tab at any point to go to a different topic area

News feeds are arranged by the resource which has provided the news story

Each news feed will display the most recent news story first and will also tell you when the news story appeared so you can see how up-to-date it is. Click on individual news stories to be taken to the full text:

Click on the title of a feed to be taken to its homepage

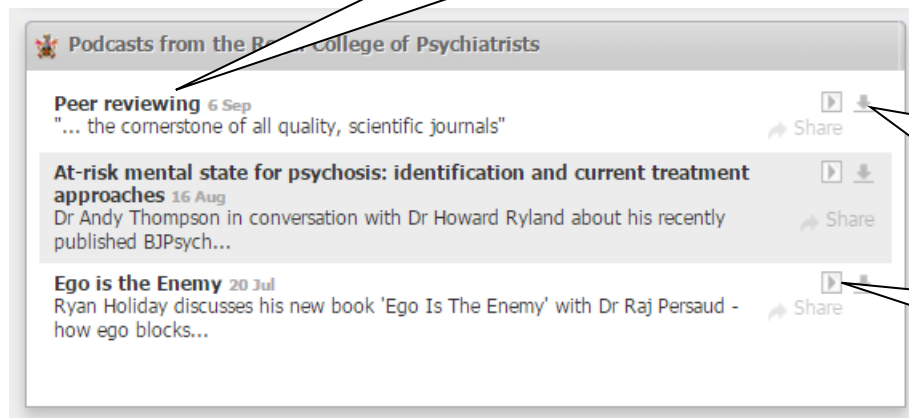

Information is given on the age of the information

Click here to view older news stories

Click on a news headline to view the full text

Some newsfeeds contain or are podcasts. These are audio recordings, usually interviews or discussions, on a particular topic.

With some browsers you may need to click on the Podcast title to go direct to the website to access it.

Click on the down arrow to download the podcast (MP3)

Click on the triangle in a box icon to listen to podcasts.

If you click on the 'Listen' option, the Podcast controls display at the top of the screen. If this doesn't work; try downloading it or click on the title of the podcast to take you the website where they may be other options available
